THE MEDICAL LIBRARY FOR THE MEDICAL SCHOOL OR THE SMALL COMMUNITY.¹

BY BAYARD HOLMES, B.S., M.D.,

Professor of the Principles of Surgery in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of Chicago.

Two years ago I published an account of an experiment I had made in teaching a class of thirty students to use a medical library.² Since that time it has been my privilege to take several classes of students through similar exercises in the Newberry library. A number of other circumstances, besides my my teaching, have led me to give my attention to libraries for medical schools and medical societies. I hope, therefore, that the presentation of this subject, however incomplete it may be, will be found useful to teachers and save some of them much waste of energy in their attempts to organize medical libraries.

The medical library question presents itself to every teacher who really wishes to give his students that quality of education which is now offered in the other scientific departments, as well as in the literary department of all our universities, and in many of our high schools and academies. Our younger medical teachers are acquainted with the great value, educationally, of the seminar method of study, and to them a medical library seems indispensable to every medical college.

Doubtless this article will attract the attention of some teachers who will be surprised to learn that there is not, in any medical college in the United States, a library which is adapted to this method of study and open to students for literary research. The graduate of any superior college or university, entering upon his medical studies, is astonished to find those pedagogic methods of study, to which he has been accustomed at the university, all stop short at the medical school. This is largely due to the fact that the traditions of the past century still prevail in medical schools, and the library as an educational engine is almost unknown in them.

² Is it desirable and practical in medical schools to teach methods of investigation in medical literature?—The Medical News, Philadelphia, August 12, 1893.

Weston Flint,¹ in 1891, reported 3,803 public libraries in the United States containing 26,826,000 bound volumes and 4,340,000 pamphlets, or 31,167,000 books in all, making an average of 8,194 volumes in each library, or about 50 books to each 100 of the population. At the same time he reported 59 public medical libraries in the United States, only six of which contain more than 10,000 volumes. These were the library of the Surgeon-General's office in Washington with 104,000 volumes, the library of the College of Physicians,² in Philadelphia, with 41,000 volumes, the library of the Pennsylvania Hospital with 14,000 volumes, the library of the New York Academy of Medicine with 30,000 volumes, the library of the New York Hospital with 20,000 volumes, and the Boston Medical Library Association with 21,565 volumes. Mention is not made in this report of the Newberry Library, in Chicago, which has about 25,000 volumes in its medical department. Perhaps the feature of this report most relevant to our subject, lies in a comparison of the department libraries of the various universities having medical departments and departments of law and theology. Thus Harvard Medical School, with 399 students, reports only 1,500 volumes in its library, while the general university library has 292,000 volumes, the law department, with 366 students, has 28,157 volumes, and the theological school, with 86 students, has 23,360 volumes. The same inequality exists at Yale College, with its 1,755 students, where there are 185,000 volumes in the library. The medical school, with 72 medical students, has 3,000 volumes in its library.

Again, there are many cities with 20,000 or more inhabitants, with flourishing medical societies but no library worthy of mention. An indistinct need of a library is felt, but sufficient data are not at hand to make even the discussion of the subject effectual. A number of medical societies, especially in the eastern states, report as high as 6,000 or 8,000 volumes in their libraries, but these libraries are in no sense working libraries, being old libraries and without adequate catalogues.

² Not a teaching body.

The ends to be accomplished by a medical college library, it seems to me, are the following:

1. To furnish the means of training students in medical bibliography and bibliographic research.
2. To furnish, through its medical literature, material for the study of each and every medical science which now forms a part of the medical curriculum.
3. To furnish material for the study of the sciences collateral to medicine.
4. To make possible the proper pedagogic methods in medical schools.

In order that the library may meet the first requirement it must not only possess all the books on some subject, but these books must be so systematically arranged that they can be used, that is to say, the books must be made into a library from the librarian's standpoint. They must be accessible. They must be classified and catalogued. They must be properly taken care of.

The librarian is now a member of a skilled profession. No one but a graduate of a library school is capable of undertaking the care of such a library as every medical school needs. Great care should be taken in the selection of a librarian, and once he is selected, he should be allowed full sway in making the library. The furniture should be of his selection and the catalogue of his construction. In small libraries the entire time of the skilled librarian would perhaps be unnecessary. Some unskilled person can soon learn to become the keeper of the books and of the library room after the first labor of cataloging is complete, and one or two days each week ought to be sufficient to keep the system up in a small library. A medical student, or some other unskilled person, can easily take care of the room and keep the books upon the shelves and assist the readers. The catalogue is of course to be a card catalogue. In a medical school, these cards should be accessible to the readers. It should embrace first the author-index, and secondly, the subject index. The author-index of a medical school should not only include the name of the author of each book in the library, but also the name of the author of each article in the serials which the library contains. The same may be said of the subject catalogue. It should be made so full that the student would be referred directly not only to books but to each article in the journals and encyclopedias.¹ There are on an average about three cards on each book. The cost of cataloging is considerable at the beginning, but inconsiderable after the library is under way. The library schools at Albany, N. Y., the Armour Institute at Chicago, the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, the Drexel Institute in Philadelphia, and the Library School in Los Angeles, California, are able to furnish competent librarians and catalogers, either by the month or for the job. The shelving and other furniture can be procured much cheaper than it can be made, and of better quality from the Library Bureau of Boston, N. Y., and Chicago.² The many details of library making can best be understood by visiting a library school or a well conducted library.

The selection of the books is a matter of the greatest importance if instruction in bibliography is to be undertaken and the library made actually useful as an educational instrument. The accompanying list endeavors to meet this end. It contains (1) works on general bibliography and library methods, (2) works on medical bibliography and (3) the medical library proper. It will be seen at once that there must be an understanding of the library on the part of the readers in order to insure its greatest usefulness to them, therefore it is necessary to have instruction in library methods before serious reading begins. This is accomplished by demonstrations by the librarian or by a teacher before classes, and by the assistance of the librarian to the reader in the actual accomplishment of his work.

The need of works on medical bibliography is apparent to all. Such serials as the *Index Medicus*³ and Schmidt's Jahrbücher are essential, and they are the back bone of a medical library.

³ This publication has been carried on for many years at a great loss to the publisher, Mr. Geo. D. Davis, of Detroit, Mich. It is now suspended. There is nothing to supply its place. It ought to receive the support of every college and college library.

In order to meet the second aim of a medical library, namely, to furnish material for the study of every medical science and art through its literature, it is necessary to have a fair representation of that literature in the library. This literature is composed of two distinct parts—first the serial literature, and secondly the compends and monographs. With the multitude of serial publications it is impossible to have the complete medical literature in any college, even were it desirable. No attempt in that direction should be made. The best that can be done, and all that is desirable, is to make a wise selection. In general medicine it is best to have the most recent encyclopedias, the most recent text books, the most important score or two of journals. There are historical reasons for admitting some of the old classical literature. In college libraries no limit need be placed upon the language in which the serials are published. Science has no language. It may seem wise sometimes to begin all the serials, at least in the departments of surgery and medicine, nor further than ten or fifteen years back. This will greatly diminish the expense and the number of volumes, but it will be very difficult to complete such broken sets. The amount of money available or the needs of particular classes, will dictate in these matters. Not very many compends or text-books should be included in a college library. One or two encyclopedias of the subject are enough. It may be desirable to have one of these encyclopedias in English and one in German or in French for comparative study. In general medical literature the serials may be selected in order to give a geographical representation. Thus in medical colleges each part of the United States ought to be represented with a standard journal. From each foreign country one journal will be useful; for example, one each from Japan, Australia, India, and southern Africa. A representation ought also to be given to the various medical sects. One or two of the best homeopathic and eclectic journals should certainly be upon the shelves.

There can be no question as to the value of biology, physics, chemistry, anthropology, and sociology, in strengthening and giving motive to the medical library. These sciences should be represented by compends and encyclopedias if the poverty of the institution makes it impossible to represent them by serials. In building up a library one or two of these accessory departments can be added as occasion requires and the resources of the institution permit.

It is unnecessary to inform teachers educated in modern pedagogic methods and acquainted with our medical schools, that little short of a revolution is desirable in order to bring them into a proper condition of efficiency. Probably all are persuaded (except where the profession seems absorbed in supplying the demands for physicians in the sparsely settled districts) that the first steps toward elevating medical education rest in an admission examination which will keep out all but the educated applicants. Unfortunately there seems to be no great eagerness on the part of educated men to accept the degree of Doctor of Medicine as long as it must be obtained through four years of torture under a system of teaching and bombastic exposition adapted to the mental digestion of uneducated farm hands and barbers.

More radical changes must however be made than the preliminary examination contemplates, though of course the very highest qualifications must be exacted in this direction. Changes are required in the system of teaching itself. In many schools the laboratory method is established in a more or less efficient manner, but only in such subjects as histology and pathology. Changes are necessary in the teaching of medicine, obstetrics, and surgery, corresponding to that which has come in histology. Lectures alone are no longer adequate. Direct methods of study must be instituted. There should be the same possibility of studying the literature of a medical case, as there is now of studying in the laboratory the development of the eye. This method of studying medicine from the original sources, medical literature, would not only improve the temper and quality of the student's conception, but would fit him also for subsequent self-culture. The seminar method of study contemplates the organization under a competent leader or professor, of classes of students who have already passed the preliminary pupil-stage and have reached the self-reliant student-stage. The work of each student is in a way original and independent, and it is to be laid out by the teacher so as to make with the work of the other students a symmetrical whole. The meetings occur only once or twice a week and pre-suppose a considerable amount of previous individual study. The essential element of this method of study in a medical school is an adequate medical library, and it is on account of this demand that this selection of books has been undertaken.

Upon the system with which the library is catalogued will depend much of its usefulness to the medical student. The only general system now published which includes medicine is the decimal system of Melville Dewey.¹

This system gives a plan readily and quickly understood and sufficiently natural in its arrangement to place the library at the command of readers at the shelves without much aid from the librarian. It may be useful to some medical readers to give a short account of this system here.

According to the decimal classification, all books are placed under one of ten general heads termed "Classes." One of the ten digits which stand for these ten classes will be the first figure of the number of each book.

4. PHILOLOGY.
5. NATURAL SCIENCE.
6. USEFUL ARTS.

8. LITERATURE.
9. HISTORY.

Medicine is found in the 6 Useful Arts. This classification was originally designed for a library rich in 1-2-3-4- classes but practically no 5- and 6-classes, therefore medicine is crowded with the other useful arts into the 600's.

600. USEFUL ARTS.

Thus it will be seen that any book in Human Anatomy will be found with the number 611 on it, a book on Surgery 617, etc. The same arrangement and numbering applies also to pamphlets and clippings. Reprints and clippings are placed in strong envelopes and treated just if they were books. In order that those unacquainted with the subject may easily see the end of the classification in one department, I will give the detail of 617.

- 617.9 Operative surgery.

Each of these decimals are carried out still farther and may be extended almost indefinitely in libraries upon special subjects as for example, Diseases of the Ear. The books and serials in this department are classified like 610. The books of a library of 200 volumes can be symmetrically arranged and numbered according to this system and placed in order on 6 shelves. Additions can be made to this library in one or many departments and yet the first two hundred books will never be disturbed in their relative positions to each other. It is impossible to conceive of a growth in any single department, as for example in 617.7, which would not be easily cared for by the use of the three decimal figures with the help of the Cutter Extension. Prof. Cutter of the Athenaeum Library, of Boston, is preparing a less fixed system, to include the department of medicine, which will soon be published. His expansive system, as it is called, uses letters instead of figures and has been adapted to Medicine by Dr. Wire, of the Newberry Library, of Chicago.

The accompanying classed catalogue, which is arranged and numbered according to the decimal classification, contains 900 entries. This would make a very serviceable library for a medical college or a medical society. From this beginning a very extensive library could with proper care and relatively small expense soon be developed. The distribution of this library is as follows :

In presenting this catalogue no apology is necessary for its incompleteness and lack of perspective. This is a pioneer effort in medical bibliography and one which the author trusts will receive the encouragement of medical teachers and medical publishers.
